Following is an interesting letter from W. S. Cassell, one of the managers of the Western Union Telegraph company:

"Bloomingron, Ind., Jan. 12, 1886.
"I have been in the telegraph business "I have been in the telegraph business for more than twenty years, and for the past five years have been troubled with what is called writer's cramp, or telegrapher's paralysis. At times my arm became so weak that I could not use it in sending dispatches, and had to use my loft. Have spent many restless nights, the pain reaching from my hand up into my shoulder. Tried everything I could hear of, but with scarcely any relief. Having strained my left side a few weeks ago, I got one of Allicock's plasters, as I usually do in such cases, and accidentally happened to see where some one had cured a weak wrist by using one of these plasters. I got another where some one had cured a weak wrist oy using one of these plasters. I got another at once and cut it in two and put one-half around my wrist. In less than two days after the pain had entirely left my wrist and arm, and in two weeks I could send nearly as well as ever. I write this hoping it will reach the eyes of others who may be afflicted as I was, as I know there are scores of them.
